

The Men Who Stare at Goats

Written by By CINDY ROLLER, News-Telegram
Thursday, 05 November 2009 11:54

I might just have to pay money to see this movie on the big screen and silly as that may sound. With the two main characters of George Clooney, playing a psychic weapon for military and Ewan McGregor, a journalist following him for a story. Clooney is a Jedi Warrior. Too ironic?! I say yes.

It all kind of has me intrigued. The original book The Men Who Stare at Goats came out in 2004, written by Jon Ronson. Ronson portrays the U.S. Army's exploration of New Age concepts and the potential military applications of the paranormal. The title refers to attempts to kill goats by staring at them.

The idea of the project was to explore "the apparent madness at the heart of U.S. military intelligence." It has been based on a series that ran in Britain called, "Crazy Rulers of the World" and this movie is so crazy it might just work. It is set to hit the big screens this Friday, Nov. 6.