North Hopkins Agriculture Department will show off the projects they've built this year during the FFA Stew and Auction Thursday, April 10.

The evening will begin with the stew supper at 6 p.m. on the North Hopkins Independent School District campus. There is no admission fee, but a monetary donation is appreciated for the stew with all the trimmings. The auction will immediately follow the meal.

Ag students have learned a variety of construction methods and techniques using various materials. Many of those projects as well as a variety of items donated by local businesses — including a John Deere “Big Scoop” toy — will be auctioned off.

“This has been a very busy and productive year and the proceeds from the auction are used to continue that success,” said Christin O’Neal, NH FFA instructor.

A few of the student projects include a metal swing and a wooden tractor yard sculpture that will include a planter to hold a variety of plants and is worth, of being a focal point for any yard, according to school staff.
